

Serendipity Space 1

Light & Fog, Shopping mall

In a shopping centre in London, there is a mysterious space called "Fogland". Legend has it that its entrance is hidden on a seemingly ordinary wall in the mall, cleverly camouflaged with visual errors. It is said that the wall is located in the sparsely populated corridor of the mall, and there is no difference between the wall and the surrounding decoration, and even no gap can be seen. However, it is only when the light is reflected in an extremely subtle way at a specific time and Angle that an invisible door is revealed.

Finding this door wasn't easy. Legend has it that the wall uses an ancient geometric design that cleverly exploits the changes of light and shadow to make it blend seamlessly with its surroundings. The lights flicker slightly on either side of the hallway, and the occasional misalignment of light and shadow can make the walls look slightly distorted or blurry, but only the sharp-eyed can spot an anomaly at that moment. Interestingly, some people will accidentally glimpse the outline of a door, but when they look back to confirm it, it's gone.

Those who managed to find the entrance described the moment they opened the wall, the door swung open, the world seemed distorted, everything before it blurred, the air filled with a soft light and a faint fog. At this point, you are no longer in a shopping mall in London, but in the legendary "Fogland", a strange space filled with light and fog.

It is said that this fog is not ordinary water vapor, but an ancient magical heritage. Those lucky enough to enter the fog will find that the light here pulsates like life, and each light that hits the fog will transport you to a different time and space. It is rumored that these space-time fragments are not random, but closely related to the inner secrets of the entrant. One saw a long-dead relative in the fog, and another shopper claimed to have witnessed an unsolved mystery from years ago. Stranger still, when someone enters the fog, the light takes them back to the London of the past, to see the dealings of ancient merchants and the bustle of the docks.

But foglands are not entirely harmless. Legend has it that if you get lost in it for too long, the light and fog will gradually erode your consciousness and blur your memory. People disappear here for hours, but it feels like only a few minutes, and when they come out, they can't find the entrance.

The strangest thing is that the gates of Fogland are not always located in the same place. Every once in a while, as the light changes, it moves quietly and reappears in a corner of the mall. This makes it an eternal mystery in the mall, always attracting those who are curious about the unknown and unexpected explorers.

Serendipity Space 2

Lift & Organ, School

At a school in Waterloo, London, there is an unassuming security door at the end of a corridor on the first floor of the school. This door usually looks like any other security door, always closed and marked with the usual "emergency exit" sign. Due to its remote location, the students hardly noticed it. However, the secret behind the door has lived on for so long that it has been passed down through generations of students, forming a bizarre urban legend.

According to legend, this door can only be opened at certain points in time. Some say it's the full moon every month, others say it's the exact time of midnight. As you approach the door, you seem to hear a strange heartbeat, faint and rhythmic. Once you pluck up the courage to push open the door, you'll find yourself entering a completely alien and surreal space.

This room is unlike any classroom, storage room, or hallway. Once you enter, it is as if you have entered an organ of the human body. The walls were not cold masonry, but soft and warm, a bit like the inner layers of a heart, beating slightly. There is no clear boundary between the ceiling and the floor, and the whole space seems to breathe slowly. The air in the room was warm and moist, and there was a soothing calm, as safe as being in a mother's womb.

The room is almost empty, but in its center, a unique seat awaits you. It does not look like an ordinary chair or sofa, but is made of a soft organic material, and its shape can be changed at any time. When you sit down carefully, the seat automatically adjusts to fit your body shape, as if it were hugging you. The feeling is soft and calm and irresistible. As your sitting position changes, the seat rises and falls, as if you are enveloped in a floating sensation.

Surprisingly, although the experience was beyond common sense, it elicited not fear, but a strange sense of security. From this seat, you can feel the tiny pulsations of the walls around you in sync with your own heartbeat, as if you and the room were one. Some students said it was like reliving the first memories of life in The Matrix.

Legend has it that everyone who enters this room embarks on a different journey. Some people feel an intense sense of relaxation and peace, as if time has stopped and they can temporarily escape the stresses and worries of reality. Others claim to have experienced an awakening of self-awareness in the room, confronting unresolved issues from the past and even talking about deeply buried secrets. It has been said that the room seems to "sense" your emotions and respond to your deepest needs.

There are also some mysteries in this room that cannot be ignored. According to legend, this room was not always there. Every once in a while, it would "disappear" and become an ordinary utility room. Those who tried to get in pushed open the door and found nothing but plain walls and piles of cleaning tools.

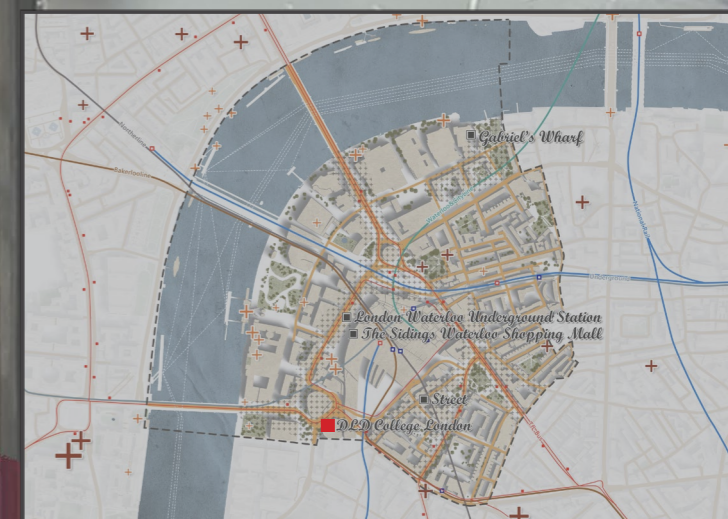

However, others warned against staying in the room for too long. Although it is a difficult feeling to let go, some people waste time on it. Some students stay in their rooms too long and come out to find that hours or even days have passed. Whether this room is an extension of the illusion or a portal to another dimension, no one knows.

Still, the legend of this mysterious safety gate continues to circulate in schools, attracting curious students to seek out and explore this mysterious space in an attempt to uncover the deep secrets behind it.

?

DLD
COLLEGE
LONDON

urbanest

Serendipity Space 3

The Death Train, the London Waterloo Station

In London, there is an urban legend about the "Train of Life", derived from the "cemetery train" that transported bodies to Brookwood Cemetery in Victorian times. According to legend, this mysterious train not only transported the dead, but also symbolized the cycle of life.

This story is about a little boy named Toby. He was very afraid of death and felt that the end of life was darkness. One day, he and his grandfather walk to an abandoned railroad, and his grandfather tells him that the railroad used to be the track of the "cemetery train" that transported the dead to suburban cemeteries. Toby was fascinated by the story, but also more afraid of death.

A few days later, Toby had a dream. He dreamed that he came to the railway track and suddenly saw a train approaching slowly with a golden light. It was warm and quiet on the train. No coffins, just smiling passengers. Toby noticed that the passengers were all long-dead family members, friends, and even elders of the family, quietly looking out the window at the beautiful scenery.

The conductor smiles and invites Toby on board, telling him that it is the "train of life", symbolizing the circle of life, not the end of death. As the train goes, the scenery outside the window changes to fields in full bloom and trees bearing fruit and vitality. The conductor told Toby, "Every life grows like a seed, Withers, and eventually returns to the earth to become part of a new life." We never really disappear, we just continue to exist in a different way."

When Toby woke up, the warmth of the dream was still there. Instead of fearing death, he understands the cycle of life and realizes that the end of life is just another new beginning.

The legend of this "train of life" spread throughout Toby's community. Children believe that the train symbolizes that life is not the end, but a new journey. While the death remains a mystery, the legend offers warm comfort to the end of life, a reminder that life is a never-ending cycle and that each end is a new beginning.

Departures			Departures
Time	Destination	Plat	Time	Destination	Plat
12:00	Portsmouth Harbour	Delayed	12:01	Sharn	On line
12:07	via Basingstoke		12:04	Surbiton	1 On line
12:07	Chertham South	4 On line	12:07	Strawberry Hill	- On line
12:08	Woking	3 On line	12:09	Yalding	On line
	via Basingstoke		12:09	Portsmouth Harbour	13 On line
12:09	Southsea	8 On line		via Balford
12:09	Reading	- 12:02	12:03	Balford	- On line
	via Reigate			via Cobham & Fife 4/9
12:03	Bittern	17 On line	12:03	Holmer & Elm Riv	- On line
	via Swanley
Page 1 of 2 12:15:12			Page 2 of 2 12:15:11

← Lift Escalator to main concourse and trains ↑
 The Sidings ↑

Escalator to main concourse and trains ↑
 The Sidings ↑

iPhone 15
 Hello, Apple Intelligence.

From £25.74pm
 + £36 upfront Ends 31/12/24

First six months half price
 on your online, then £12.74pm

Price includes £360 warranty when you trade in an eligible iPhone 11 or 12 Series

JCDecaux

iPhone 15
 Hello, Apple Intelligence.

From £25.74pm
 + £36 upfront Ends 31/12/24

First six months half price
 on your online, then £12.74pm

Price includes £360 warranty when you trade in an eligible iPhone 11 or 12 Series

JCDecaux

NatWest

Get cash here

CAUTION
 WET FLOOR

Serendipity Space 4

The Original Circus, the London Waterloo Area

In London, there is a bizarre urban legend about the circus and the birth of the mysterious "bug". At the end of the 18th century, Philip Astley founded London's first modern circus, where the performers' skill and equestrian displays drew huge crowds. However, in the early days of the circus, Astley noticed a strange phenomenon - a tiny, almost invisible creature appeared on the performance stage and made a buzzing sound, known as a "bug".

At first, the bugs just upset the workers, but as the show went on, things got weirder. Horses lose control in certain areas, acrobats inexplicably lose their balance, and even clowns make repeated mistakes. Astley realized that these "bugs" could be related to these anomalies. He decides to stay alert and investigate, hoping to uncover the truth about these mysterious creatures.

According to legend, Astley saw an incredible scene in the middle of the night: "bugs" gathered in the air, forming a strange aperture, as if they were dancing, making a strange musical hum. He realized that these creatures were not a disturbance, but a manifestation of some power.

Astley decided not to chase the bugs away, but to learn to live with them. He found that the animals could help performers improve their skills, especially in aerial stunts, where they seemed to enhance balance and even make dangerous moves easier and more natural. So he redesigned the circus show to include the buzz of these "bugs."

The circus was a huge success and the audience marveled at the performers' incredible skill, while Astley kept the worm's secret under wraps. He warned all the staff not to reveal their presence to the public, or the magic of the circus might be lost.

Over time, the rumors about the "bug" died down, but circus performers kept the story alive. Whenever a magical inspiration or mistake occurs in a performance, everyone laughs and says, "That must be a mistake." Near the old circus shed in London, it is said that a faint humming sound can still be heard, as if these mysterious little creatures are still guarding the circus miracle.

GIVE WAY

ZIER STREET

Pedestrian Zone ENDS

Except cycles

Steak

TURNER & GEORGE
New Pastries Exam
£45

Iceland

Iceland

Le Premier Shoe Care
SHOE REPAIRS & KEYS CUT
WHILE-U-WAIT
KEYS CUT

SHOE REPAIRS
KEY CUTTING
WHILE YOU WAIT

SUNNETTE
CRAFT TRADERS
UPNEAS

GIVE WAY

Pedestrian Zone ENDS

except cycles

LOWER MARSH MARKET

Steak

TURNER & GEORGE
BEEF VENISON
PORK CHOPS
LAMB CUTLETS
TURKEY
SALMON
SUNDAY
CORNED BEEF

Iceland

Iceland

H&M

Except cycles

Premier Shoe Care
020 7928 7923 110

LAUNCELOT STREET SE1

GIVE WAY

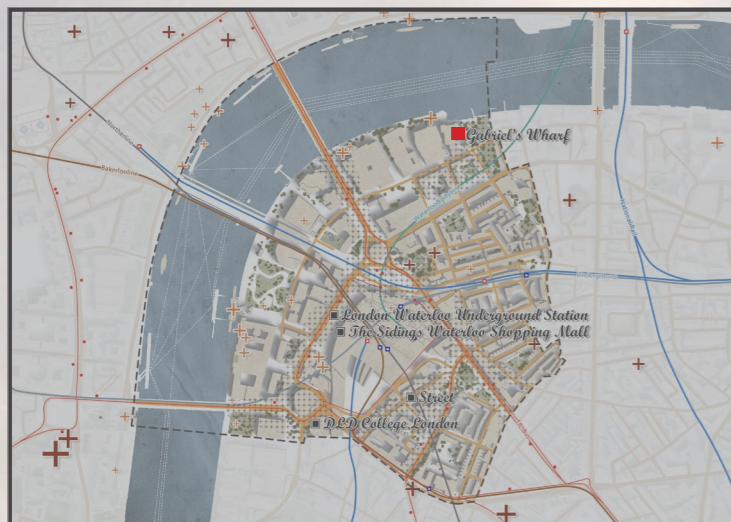

CCTV

Care
020 7928 7923

BRITISH CRAFT TRADERS UP AHEAD

vodafone

SAVE

Serendipity Space 5

The Ancient Roman Shipwreck, Riverbank

On both sides of the River Thames in London, there is a forgotten legend about the wreck of a mysterious ancient Roman ship. For hundreds of years, the ship had been immersed in the mud of the riverbank, until a chance dig gave it a glimpse into its past.

The story takes place in the early 1900s, when London was undergoing urban construction, and workers were found digging near the banks of the river on this ancient Roman ship. Although the hull has disintegrated, it still retains stunning details, beautiful carvings and ancient wood that give it a sense of history. Archaeologists quickly stepped in, carefully excavating the ship and transporting it to the museum for further study and display. People entered the museum with curiosity and fear, hoping to see the old ship.

However, with the passage of time, older ships began to face the dual threat of technical limitations and environmental factors. Due to the lack of protection technology at the time, this precious old ship was gradually oxidized and could not maintain its original luster. Finally, the once stunning Roman ship is transferred to a distant museum warehouse, where she becomes the sole guardian of history, quietly waiting for her fate to change.

While the ship is now hidden among countless dust exhibits, its story has been passed down from generation to generation among museum staff and archaeologists. Known as the "Silent Witness", the ship is considered not only a symbol of Roman navigational skills, but also a bridge between ancient and modern times. Rumor has it that when night falls and the museum's lights go out, the spirit of the ship quietly wakes up and roams the empty warehouse. Some say they heard whispers in the middle of the night, between the ships and the waters I used to sail.

Many visitors to the museum began to talk about the myth, arguing that if you stood in front of the museum's warehouse door late at night, closed your eyes and listened to distant whispers, you could hear the story of the ship and even feel it float gently on the water. Some say she was looking for her former companions, eager to embrace the river again.

This myth has attracted many mystics and mediums, who perform rituals in the moonlight in an attempt to communicate with the spirits of the old ship. They believe that the souls of old ships can reveal the secrets of the past and bring wisdom and inspiration to modern people.

Flood Tide

Low Tide

