

RESEARCH CONCEPT

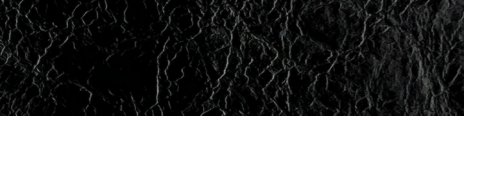

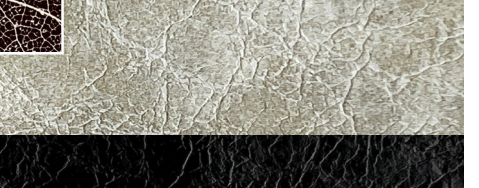

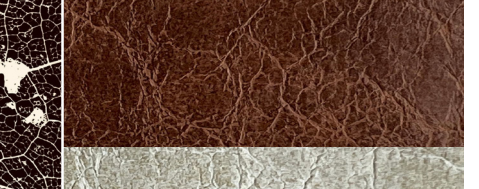

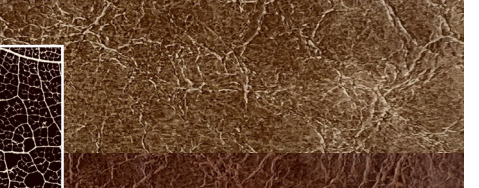

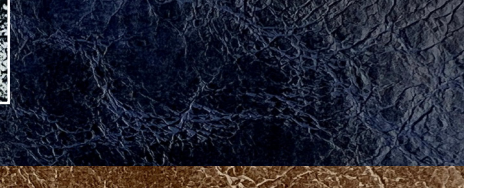

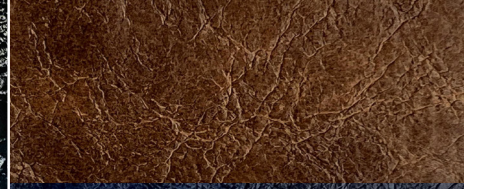

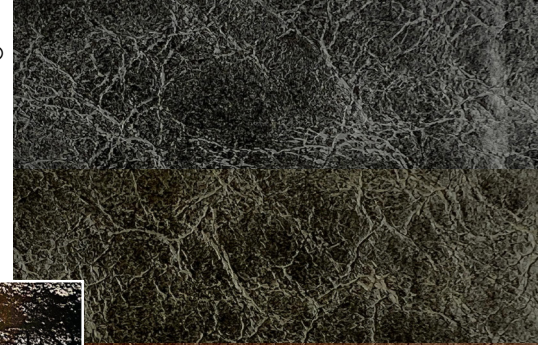

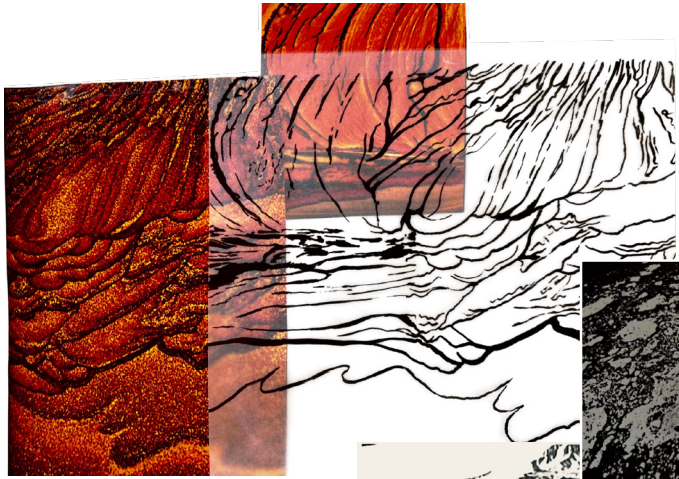

As we look at the plates in this book we soon make a curious discovery: Nature uses the same ideas in her forms and patterns in quite different places. Inexhaustible though Nature is in designing shapes, she may use the same design in various aspects—on a large scale and on a small scale, in minerals and in plants, in animals and in the immense spaces of the earth and the sky. The aerial photograph of a river estuary resembles a plant with its stem, its leaves, and its flowers, and the forked lightning striking from the sky displays a similar branching pattern.

Waxed Cotton
Samples

I was initially drawn to the lustrous finish of Alexander McQueen's beetled linen, but it was too expensive. Instead, I used waxed cotton, crumpling it to create wear marks that reflect the aged textures in my research imagery.

15 REFLECTION ON MOVING WATER

Every water surface is in constant motion. Even the smoothest sea is subject to small distortions because the air, too, is never at rest. These movements of water are demonstrated most clearly when an image is reflected by it. But of a light source gives rise to pictures such as this, the striation of which is
