

Eternal Echoes

Xingransong
2025 Spring/Summer

This is not just clothing. This is memory in motion.
Silence given shape.
Light wrapped in
grief.
Each seam is stitched with what
was left unsaid.
Each layer
remembers
something the world
forgot.
We dress not just
the body — but the
soul that lingers.

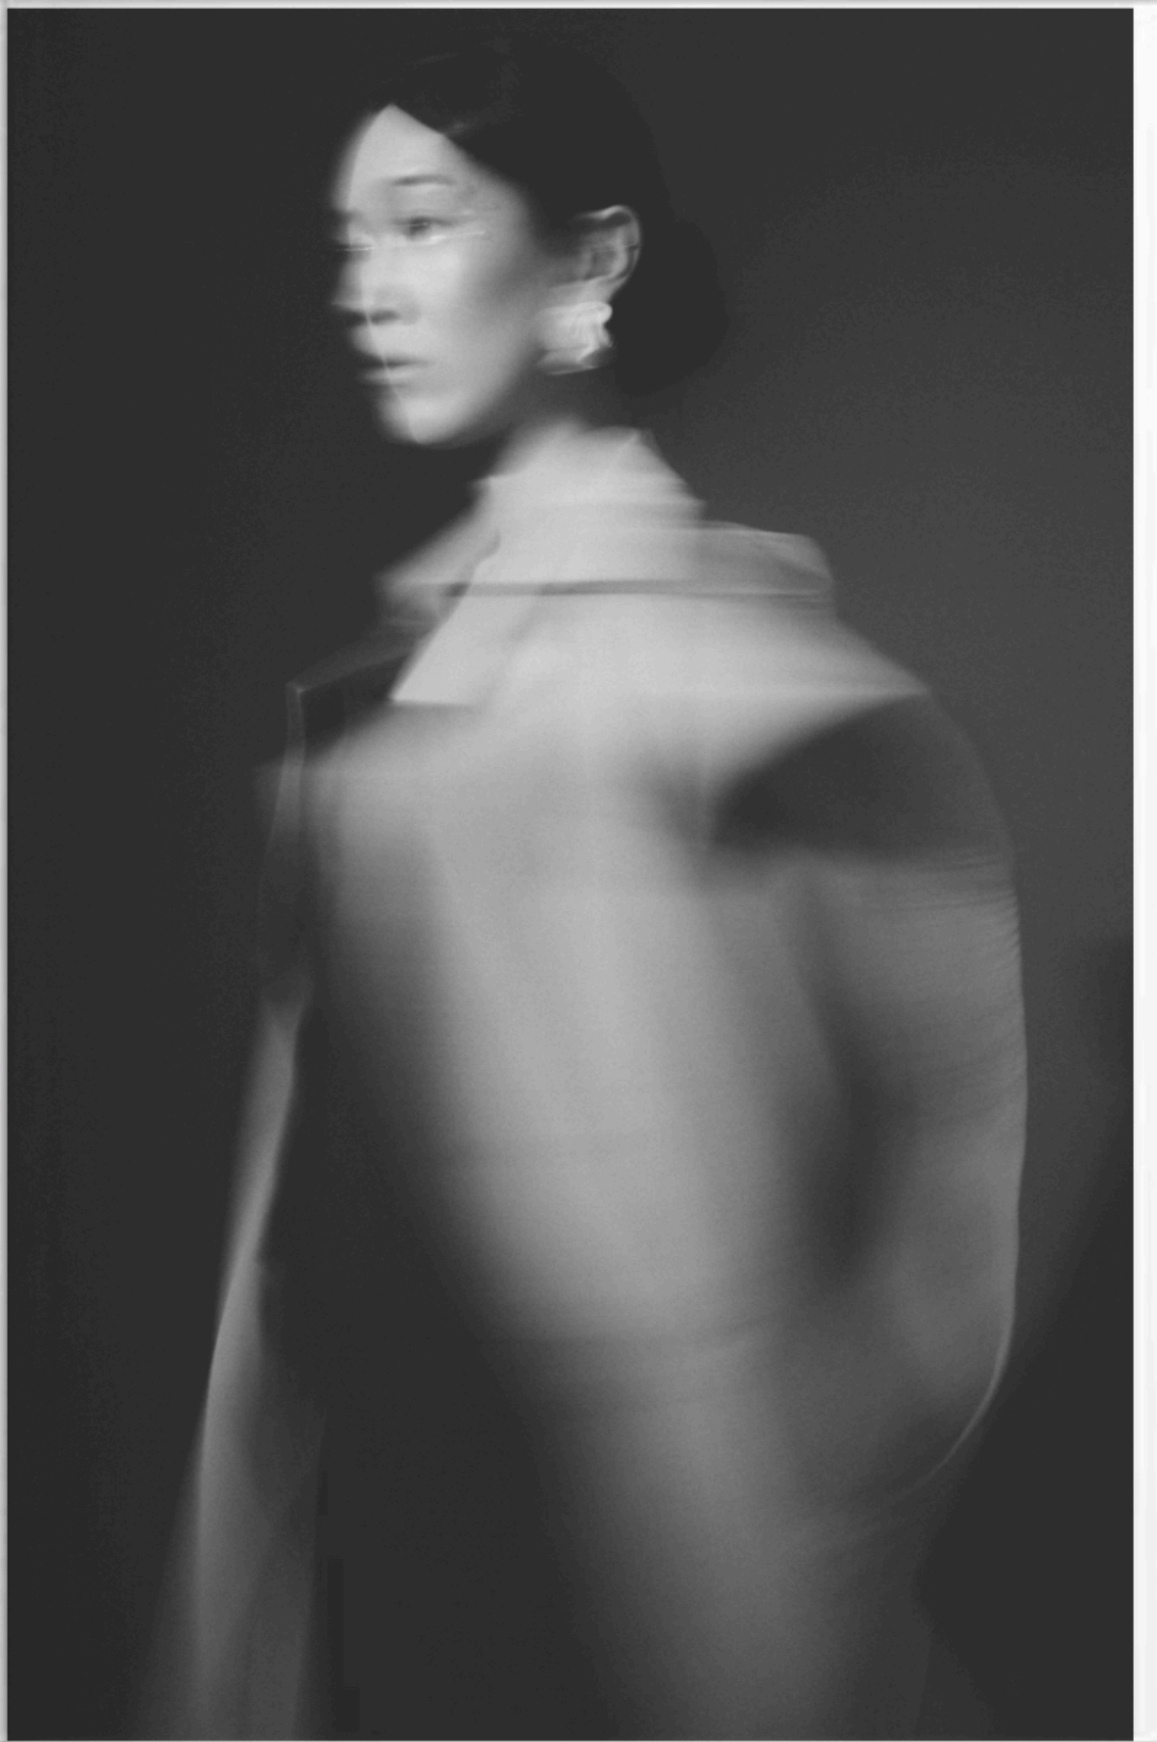

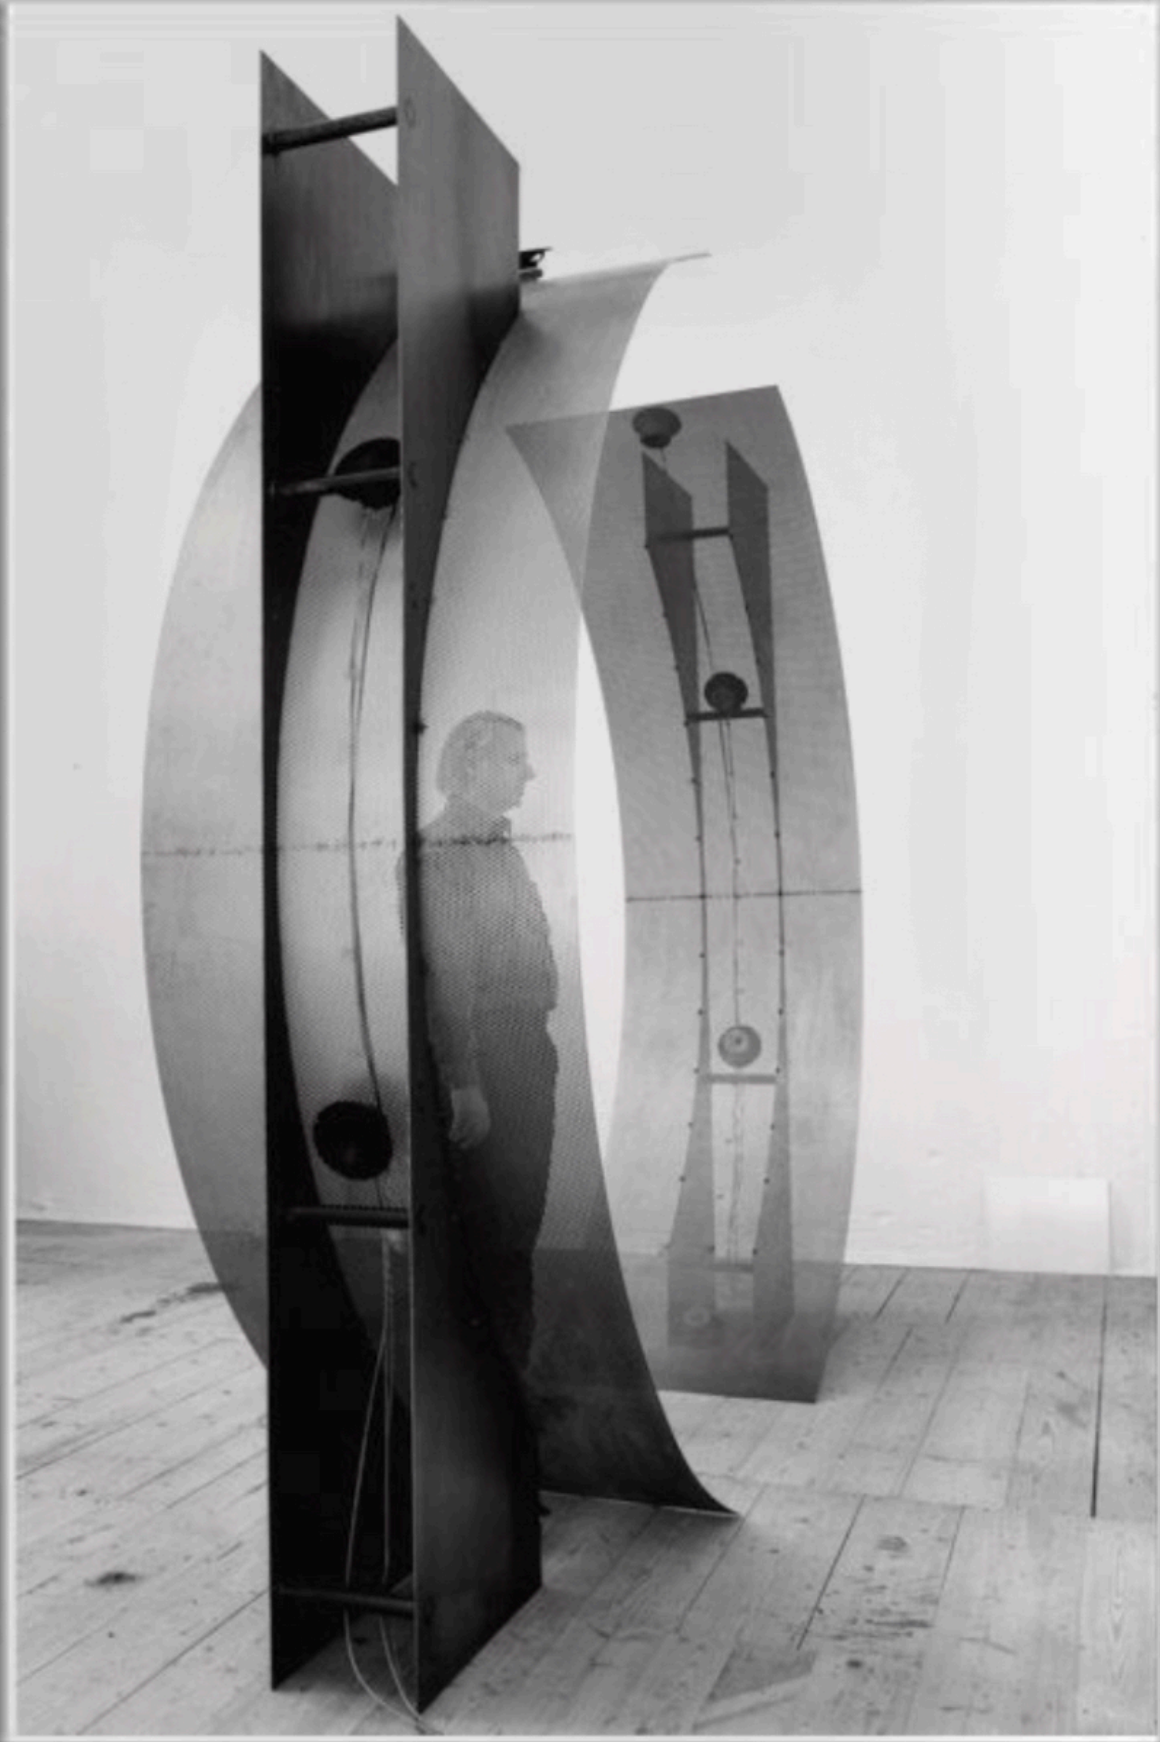

Manifesto

Life and death are not opposing forces, but resonating echoes — intertwined and cycling endlessly through the river of time. This collection transforms garments into vessels of memory and transformation through structured, spatial silhouettes. Spiral constructions and lantern-inspired forms, reinforced by corsetry boning, create layered, flowing shapes that symbolize the continuation of life and the reverberation of spirit.

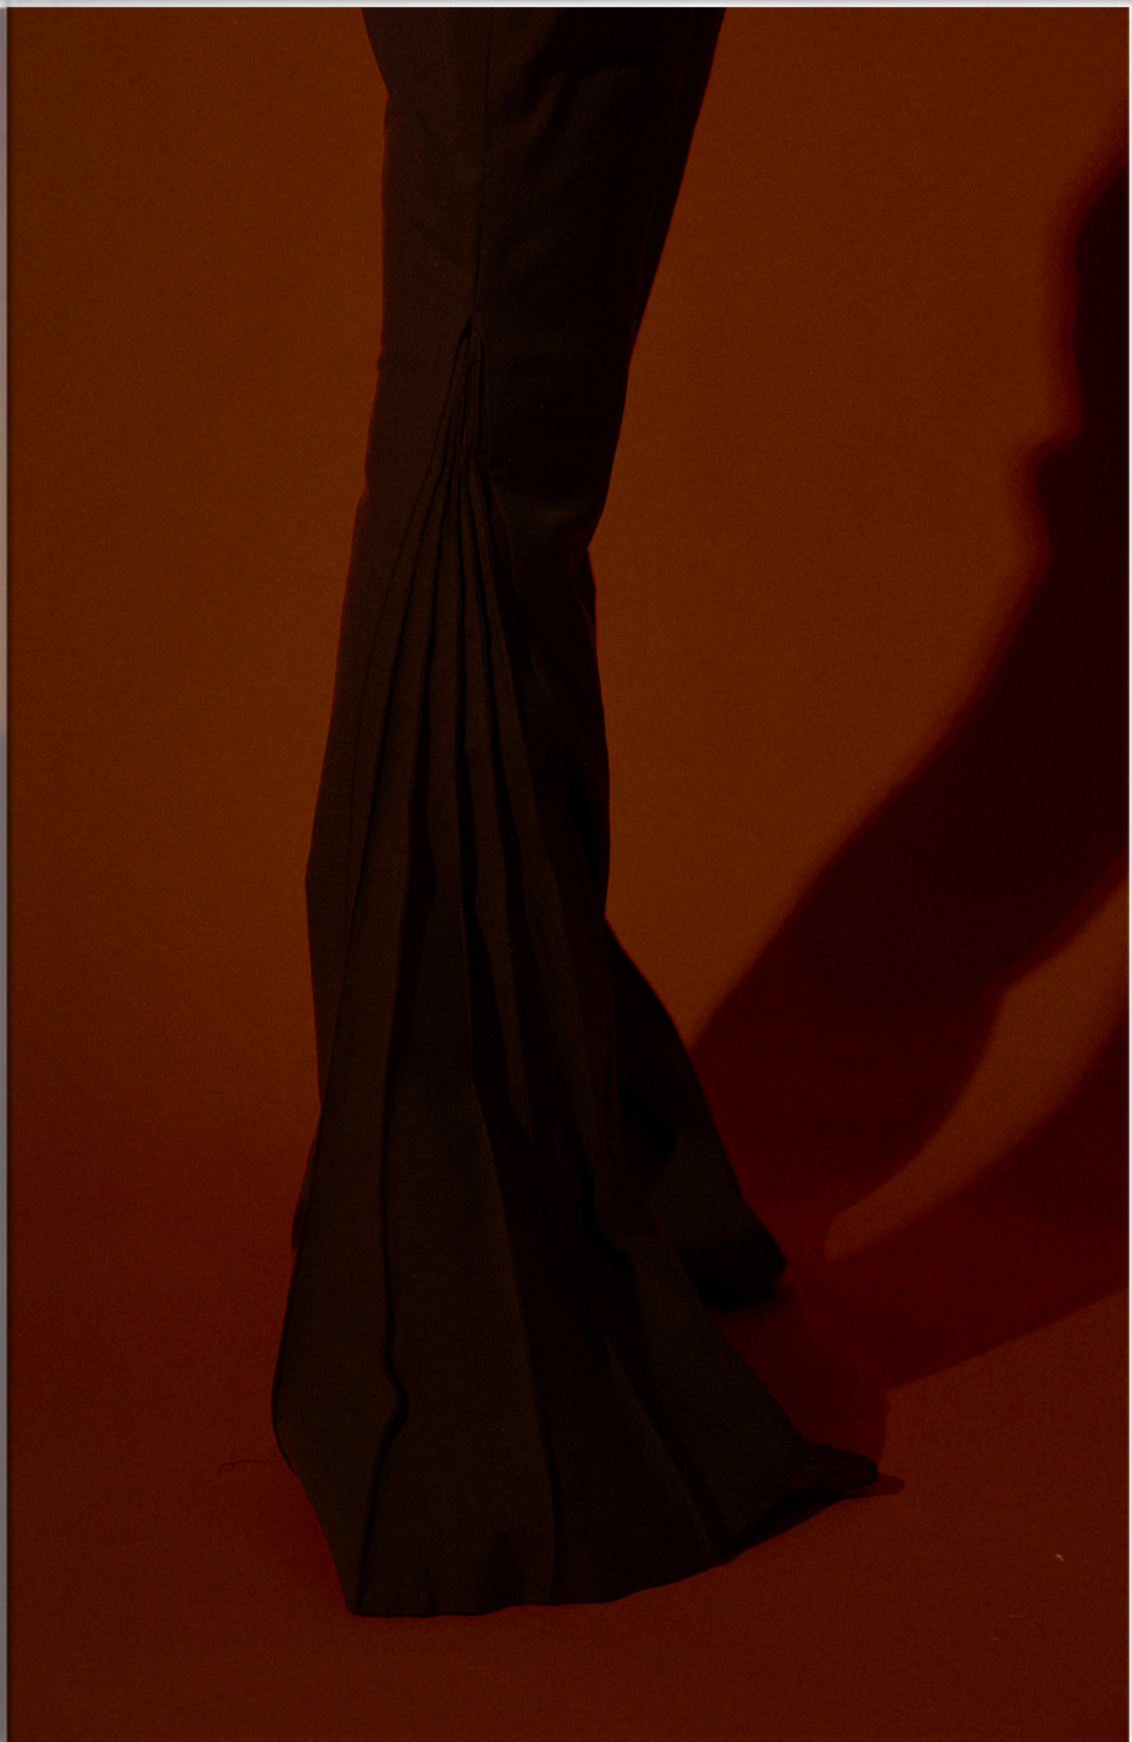

The use of silicone strikes a balance between softness and structure, blurring the boundary between body and soul, the tangible and the intangible — evoking a unique visual and tactile tension.

In contemporary culture, death is often avoided, suppressed, or sanitized. This collection seeks to break that silence. Through clothing as medium, it calls for a renewed reflection on loss, memory, and the quiet persistence of spiritual continuity.

Through vivid contrasts in form and material, the collection invites a deeper contemplation of life's essence, offering wearers a space to articulate their own truth between reality and feeling.

The soul slipped gently from the flesh

My skin remembers you molded in silence, sealed in silicone.

I was afraid to lose.
Afraid to look at the silence they left behind.
I wanted to run — to wrap myself in
and forget.

But the memories kept speaking.
In shadows.
In seams.
In light.

Flows like unspoken
emotion — soft,
weightless,
suspended. The trousers twist
around the legs
like memory
wrapping the body, each fold
a quiet echo of movement.

This collection was born not from acceptance,
but from longing —

the desperate urge to hold on to what has slipped away.
